Korean Food, British Food: Part 2

I think Korean food is like a second home food for Mev.

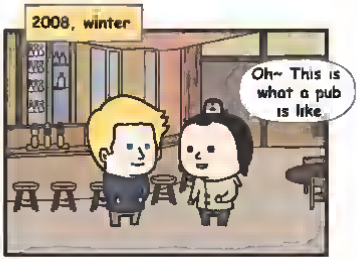
It's been 4 years since I moved to England, so what do I think about British food then?

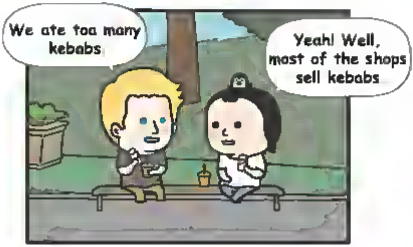


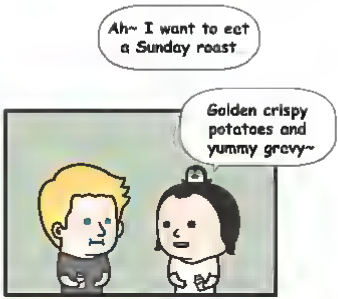
When I recall the memory of the first time I visited England

I thought the food wasn't very impressive.

But 7 years later since that time.

If I go away somewhere,..

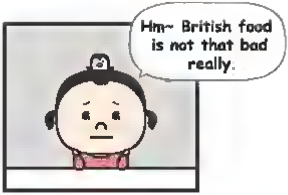




I think it's interesting that the food that I miss became British food.

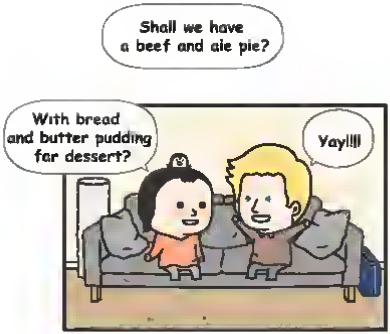
I sometimes see wrong information on the internet.

Or I find people make judgements easily from a very small bad example.

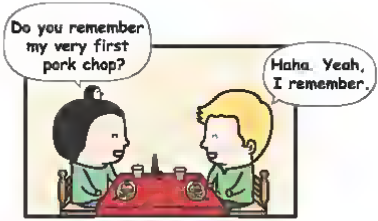


I feel kind of sad to see that people underestimate British food

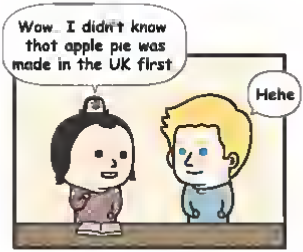
I wouldn't say that British food is the best food in the world



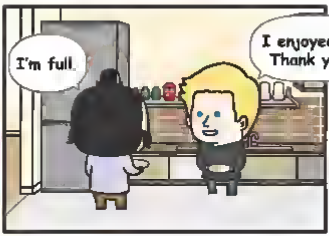
But there are many things that make you scream joyfully when you hear it.



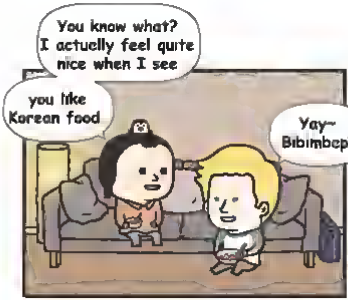
We have special memories about food..



I always find some unknown things in the UK's food.



Obviously, here are sa many foods that make our bellies so happy every day.



You know what? I actuelly feel quite nice when I see you like Korean food
Yay~ Bibimbap*)
*Rice mixed with many vegetables meat and chilli sauce

Do you feel the same because I like British food and enjoy cooking them?
Ohh

Yeah? I made a cookery book too

I think British food to me is like Korean food to Mev.

It's interesting food

It's quite tasty

I wish...

these thoughts can rise from everyone's kitchens too
